A Freight Wreck.

BLACKSTONE, VA., May 1.—[Special.]—A wreck occurred here to-day about 1:30 P. M. between the east and west-bound freight trains. It seems the second section of the freight going east on the main line ran into the caboose of the first section, breaking it to pieces and throwing it on the side track and upsetting a coal car. In the meantime the freight going west on the switch in passing its engine, struck the demolished caboose and coal car, derailing it and causing it to turn over on its side down an embankment. Considerable damage was done, but the wrecking train from Crewe is here with a force of hands, and the main line will be cleared in a short time. No one was hurt.

Governor McKinney Recommended For Second Place on the Ticket.

RINGGOLD, May. 1, 1891.

The subject of presidential timber seems to be one of very general discussion throughout the country. All newspaperdom seems to be the country. All newspaperdom seems to be taking a hand in the matter, and whether the candidates for the two places on the presidential ticket will be from New York or the West is a frequent inquiry; whether the candidate must advocate or oppose the free coinege of silver is still a question; but whether we must have an advocate of tariff reform admits of no question, for that is now and should be in 1892 the keynote of the Demogratic party. Tariff reform is what we want and cratic party. Tariff reform is what we want and what I think we are destined to have in the near future. While others are making suggestions as to their choice for the places on the near future. While others are making suggestions as to their choice for the places on the ticket, I deem it not wholly inappropriate that Virginia should bring forth a candidate; and who would doubt that all Virginia in one solid phalaux would endorse the move if the name of one of her most loyal sons, Hon. "THE WANDERING JEW."

A Sermon Eased on Eugene Sue's Celebrated Novel.

The Rev. Edward M. Calish, of Peoria, Ill. who had been invited by the committee of the synagogue Beth Ahaba to deliver a sermon, preached last evening in the house of wor-ship on Eleventh street before a very large audience.

Judging from the remarks which could be gathered from quite a number of the congregation at the close of the service, Mr. Calish de a very favorable impression. His sermon was carnest and convincing and proved to be the result of deep and profound knowledge.

After the usual preliminary services Mr. Calish started out by saying that coming from a distant State he had had some tropidation and fear to make his address and speak to the congregation at a place so sacred by all the dear associations that cling to it.

The place was hallowed by the one whose life, dear to all, had been given up on that very spot.

He had feared to come and to make the attempt to speak, but the cordiality which he had met with on every side had completely

Wandering Jew of fact and fiction, Mr. Calish said that the Wandering Jew of fiction and tradition was loaded down with a curse, while the one of history was upheld by the blessing consisting in his faith in his God, and no sufferings could diminish his love for his Lord.

The speaker then gave a superficial glance at the history of the Jews, beginning with the Balylonian exile in the year 586 before the present era.

He described how in the year 70 of the

He described how in the year 70 of the presenters Rome took possession of Palestine and subdued Jerusalem.

At that time there was no hope left for the Jews. They turned their faces to the world, but the world scorned them, and they became then truly the wandering Jews of history. For nearly eighteen centuries they experi

For nearly eighteen centuries they experienced a series of persecutions oppressions and sufferings, with only a short intermission during the time when the Moors had possession of Spain, but at their expulsion everybody once more united in bitter and relentless persecution of the Jews, until the expulsion edict was issued under Ferdinand and Isabella in 1422, when the Jews were told either to submit to baptism or be expelled.

By a strange conscidence in the same year America was discovered, the land which was to offer freedom to the Jewish nation.

To-day the condition of the Jew was a

To day the condition of the Jew was a happy and enviable one compared with that of the past

f the past. Outside of Russia, Germany and Austria, the wandering Jew had come to the end of his journey, and especially in this beautiful country he was an honored citizen, respected by all, and had proven himself worthy of it, Appreciating the boon of liberty which had come upon him he could be found in all sta-tions of life, a substantial and honored citizen in the community.

In turning to the hope of the Jews for the future, the speaker related an incident which he witnessed several years ago while lecturing in Galesburg. Ill., where a Methodist minister expressed his idea of the life and aspirations of the level to the affect that he there has been determined. of the Jews to the effect that he thought the Jews were all born in Palestine, and expected to return to that country in the near future. Far from this, however, the Jews of the present age did not believe in a restoration of their natural kingdom; but they had become loyal citizens of the world and they did believe and hope for a restoration of their religion.

It was true that in the past the Jews had looked forward to their restoration as a na-tion and to their return to the Holy Land; but the eighteen hundred years of waiting had taught them that their restoration was not to be expected in a hieral, physical way. The Lord of Zion was not the Lord of State government, but that of morality. Without His law Israel is nothing, but with His law

Israel is everything.

Mr. Calish closed his discourse with a beautiful illustration, culminating in the thought that this great globe, turning around the axis of reason and intelligence, would gradually abolish the line of demarkation between the several religious and finally merge them to-gether in the announced truth of the Word of God, and all would at the end return to the God of Israel.
